

Ocheyedan Mound

Once thought to be Iowa's highpoint, the scenic 1,655 foot tall Ocheyedan Mound is located just 14 miles from Hawkeye Point southeast of Ocheyedan. This 29 acre area is a historic site with hiking opportunities. The Ocheyedan Mound was formed by the Wisconsin Glacier approximately 13,000 years ago, and was dedicated as a state and county preserve in 1984.

From the very beginning, the development of Hawkeye Point has been a volunteer effort, and much of the work has been funded by the Community Foundation of Osceola County, National Highpointers Foundation, Lyon County Riverboat Foundation, and through generous private donations.

The Hawkeye Point Foundation is a 501c3 and relies on generous donors and volunteers to continue its development.

Come visit Iowa's highest point!

Located in Osceola County, just north of Sibley, Hawkeye Point is the highest spot in the state of Iowa at 1,670 feet. Visitors come from all across the US and overseas to see our highpoint, and amenities and features are continually being added so no visit is the same!

For years, Hawkeye Point was known primarily to local residents and to members of the National Highpointers Association, which has a mission to preserve public access for the highest points in each state. In 2008, Osceola County acquired 7 acres of the Merrill Sterler farm surrounding Hawkeye Point, and since then the site has become a popular roadside stop for travelers and a destination for those near and far.
